Client confidentiality and microchipped animals

What can I do if a client presents an animal registered in another person’s name?

Yes:

Do you have prior written agreement with your client (i.e. the current keeper) that allows you to pass on their personal data and details of the animal and its location to the registered keeper and/or the database provider? [See 29.43 & 29.45]

NO:

You should seek your client’s consent to release their information (i.e. name/address) to the registered keeper and/or the database provider. [see 29.46 & 29.47]

You may pass on the information as per the conditions of the agreement.

This flow chart should be read in conjunction with supporting guidance on client confidentiality (Chapter 29) in the RCVS Code of Professional Conduct for Veterinary Surgeons.
Contact the registered keeper and/or database provider and tell them the animal has been brought in. However, do not release your client’s personal information at this stage. What you do next will depend upon what the registered keeper and/or database provider tells you (some disclosures are exempt under the DPA 1998).

A. No issues
If the registered keeper is unconcerned about the situation, consent will need to be obtained to change the microchip details. (Remember, you should not pass on the current keeper’s personal information)
[See 29.49]

B. Suspected theft
If the registered keeper and/or database provider tells you the animal is stolen, tell them you will pass on the client’s personal details to the Police (alternatively, ask the registered keeper and/or database provider to report the theft and advise that you will provide the relevant information to the Police at their request).
[See 29.50 (a)]

C. Civil dispute
If the registered keeper wants to recover the animal, you should only provide the client’s personal information if the registered keeper has engaged a lawyer/legal advisor to deal with recovery. The safest approach is to disclose the information directly to the legal advisors.
[See 29.50 (b)]

Release the information to the registered keeper and/or database provider.
[See 29.47]

*This flow chart should be read in conjunction with supporting guidance on client confidentiality (Chapter 29) in the RCVS Code of Professional Conduct for Veterinary Surgeons.